

THE GALACTIC CENTER

NASA's three Great Observatories—Chandra, Hubble, and Spitzer—gazed into the center of our galaxy to create this composite image. Hubble observations (yellow) trace nebulae where stars are being born. Red represents Spitzer's infrared observations, while blue and violet represent the X-ray observations of Chandra. The exact center of the galaxy lies within the white region near the center.