

M9 GLOBULAR CLUSTER

Globular clusters are swarms of very old stars that were born long before the Sun. Most are concentrated toward the center of the Milky Way, including this one, M9, some 25,000 light-years away. M9 is estimated to contain a quarter of a million stars. In this image from the Hubble Space Telescope, hot blue stars and cooler red giants can be identified by their colors.