

A true Renaissance Man

With a thirst for knowledge and understanding that could never be quenched, Leonardo truly embodied the spirit of the Renaissance.

Just as Leonardo's life was filled with travel and adventure, his restless mind never stayed put in one place for long—it was always seeking out new challenges. He came up with more ideas in his 67 years than he had time to properly address.

Clearly, he took advantage of the support offered to artists and thinkers in the 1400s and 1500s. His unique combination of talents earned him attention and fame across Europe.

“The loss of Leonardo,” wrote Vasari, “was mourned out of measure by all who had known him, for there was none who had done such honor to painting.”
