

However, once his mind was engaged in a task, he would not be hurried. He was committed to the most exhaustive examinations of whatever topic currently obsessed him. To do that

DID YOU KNOW?

The church where Leonardo was buried was ruined during the French Revolution in the 1790s. His bones were supposedly found in 1863 and reburied at Amboise.

properly took time and effort—it would not happen by accident.

“Develop your senses—especially learn how to see,” he declared. “Realize that everything connects to everything else.”

Leonardo was ambitious and proud of his accomplishments, but he did not take himself so seriously that he couldn’t also make fun of himself. “The worst evil which can befall the artist,” Leonardo noted with some amusement, “is that his work should appear good in his own eyes.”

He never stopped searching for lofty goals, and when he achieved one, he was satisfied only until a new challenge came along.
