

noticeable to anyone who saw the pictures he produced. But this ability would not flourish by itself. It required the proper direction and training. As Leonardo later wrote in his notebooks, it is not enough for an artist simply to copy what is placed in front of him. Knowledge and thought concerning what is being drawn are also needed.

