

Securing this commission was a big step for Leonardo, but he never finished the painting. Leaving work unfinished was to become a habit throughout his life. Leonardo may not have had a short attention span, but he was certainly easily interrupted. So when he received an offer to embark on a different project, one that involved moving to nearby Milan, he jumped at the chance of a new adventure.

