

Leonardo made detailed studies of different parts of the human body. Here he has sketched arms, facial muscles, and fingers. His dissections of the human body helped him to understand it better.

With the cross-section of the eye and the human head and eye, Leonardo compared layers of the skull and brain with that of the many transparent layers of the skin of an onion.

Leonardo investigated and explored different aspects of the shoulder and neck in order to practice showing them realistically.

