

were not as cheerful as they once had been, having lived under the threat of war for years.

For the 48-year-old Leonardo, his return was more of a triumph than he might have expected. After all, few of his paintings and projects had ever been completed. So it was perhaps surprising that Leonardo enjoyed such an excellent reputation as an artist, engineer, and architect. He was liked and admired by everyone—well, almost everyone.

One notable exception was a young painter and sculptor named Michelangelo Buonarroti. No one knows exactly why the two men didn't get along with each other. Most likely, Michelangelo resented how famous Leonardo had become, despite having accomplished so little. Yes, Leonardo had ideas for paintings,
