

Animal families

Did you know?

Male black widow spiders are often eaten by their bigger female mate!

Lion

Lions live in family groups called prides. They share out the food between them.

Every animal has a different kind of family life. Some animals live alone and come together only to mate, others live in family groups.

Lionesses do most of the hunting.

Male lions protect the group.

Domestic cat

Unlike lions, domestic cats live alone.

All the females look after the cubs.

Family groups

Humans often live in a small group called a nuclear family.

Meerkats live in a large group called an extended family.

Sharks live on their own, coming together briefly only to mate.

Watching over baby

Male rheas take care of the female's eggs, then look after their babies for a few months.

Scorpions

carry their babies on their backs.

Baby bats are taken care of in one large group called a nursery.

Baby birds are fed by both parents until they leave the nest.

Flycatcher

Some fish protect their babies by carrying them in their mouths.
