

Books

Did you know?

So many copies of the Bible have been sold that they would fill 120,000 libraries.

The words and pictures inside books provide readers with information, ideas, and fun.

Library

Public libraries are places where people can read and borrow many different kinds of books.

Book shelves Study desk

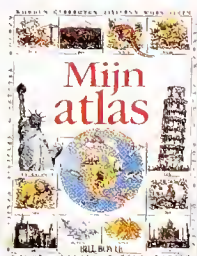

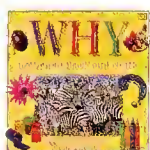

Novelty books

Novelty books have pop-ups, flaps, and stickers to make reading fun.

Nonfiction

Nonfiction books are about the real world. They contain facts, pictures, and photographs.

Fiction

Fiction books contain made-up stories. Children's fiction often has pictures.

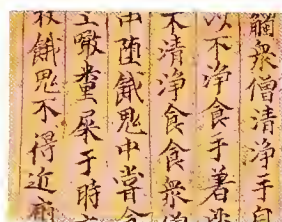

CD-Roms

CD-Roms are information discs read by computers. They have pictures, words, and sounds.

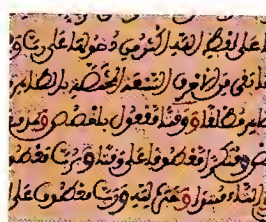

Writing

To write, people use a collection of letters and symbols called an alphabet.

The Chinese use symbols called characters.

Arabic words read from right to left.

"But who is to give the prizes?" quite a chorus of voices asked.
"Why, she, of course," said the Duke, pointing to Alice with one finger; and the whole party at once crowded round her, calling out in a confused way, "Prizes! Prizes!"
Alice had no idea what to do, and in a hurry she put her hand into her pocket, and pulled out a box of confetti, (luckily the salt water I put got into it) and handed them round as prizes. There was exactly one a-piece, all round.

The Roman alphabet is used around the world.

Braille books

Braille books use a special alphabet of raised dots that blind people "read" with their fingers.
