Yee-ha!
Moo
Pampas
Vast grassy plains called the Pampas, used for growing cereals and raising cattle, cover much of central Argentina, where gauchos or cowboys tend the cattle.
Argentina
Traditionally agricultural, the second largest country in South America stretches 2,290 miles (3,694km) from the Gran Chaco region in the north to the island of Tierra del Fuego in the south.
Itaipú Dam
The Itaipú Dam on the Paraná River covers all of Paraguay's energy needs, and even some of Brazil's.
Paraguay
Landlocked and with few natural resources, Paraguay is largely agricultural. The majority of people are bilingual, speaking Spanish and Guaraní.
Asunción
Asunción
The full name of Paraguay's capital city is Nuestra Señora Santa María Asunción. It is the country's principal port, situated on the Paraguay River.
Tango
Originating in the slums of Buenos Aires in the late 1800s, the tango is now the national dance of Argentina.
It takes two to tango.
Agriculture
Cotton
The fertile plains of Paraguay are ideal for growing cotton, soybeans, and other crops for export.
Woven bags
Many Guaraní and Macá Amerindians of the vast Gran Chaco region make a living by selling woven bags to tourists.
Patagonia
In the south of Argentina lies Patagonia, a largely agricultural area with small communities of former Welsh settlers.
Top trains
In 1857, the first railway line opened in Argentina, which soon boasted one of the world's largest rail networks.
Hi!
Hi!
Hiya!
Mt. Aconcagua, Argentina
Highest mountain in South America
It can be chilly in Chile.
Chile
Oddly shaped Chile is 2,610 miles (4,200km) long and only 112 miles (180km) wide. This elongated country has a hot desert in the north, glaciers in the south, and a Mediterranean-style climate in the center.
Fruitful valleys
The valleys in the center of Chile produce world-class vines for making wine, as well as fruit, tobacco, and other crops.
I'm not for sale.
It's all downhill from here.
Andes Mountains
Running the length of Chile along the border with Bolivia and Argentina, the Andes account for more than 80 percent of the country's landscape.
Atacama Desert
The Atacama Desert is rich in minerals, including copper, of which Chile is the world's largest exporter.
Angry Earth
Chile has more than 620 volcanoes, many of them active, and the country is also affected by strong earthquakes.
Have you seen Andy?
Inca Trail
Does it have two presidents?
Twice as good
Unlike most countries, Bolivia has not one but two capital cities, La Paz and Sucre.
La Paz
Highest capital city in the world
Hot stuff!
Sucre
Punta Arenas
Chile's Punta Arenas is the most southerly city in the world and sits underneath the hole in the ozone layer. So, beware the dangerous rays of the Sun!
