

North European Plain

The vast North European Plain stretches the width of the continent from the Fens in England to the Ural Mountains in Russia. The flat, fertile plain never rises more than 1,000ft (300m) above sea level and is used to grow wheat and other crops.

River Danube

One of Europe's longest rivers and an economic lifeline for eastern Europe, the Danube passes through or alongside Germany, Austria, Slovakia, Hungary, Croatia, Serbia, Romania, Bulgaria, Ukraine, and Moldova, often forming a natural border between countries, before emptying out into the Black Sea.

Mediterranean Sea

The popular tourist destination of southern Europe, with its attractively warm climate, lies along the Mediterranean Sea. This almost completely landlocked expanse of water is connected to the Atlantic Ocean through a single narrow channel: the 8-mile- (13km-) wide Strait of Gibraltar.