

Wide-ranging rangers

Park rangers keep forests healthy and safe, by doing everything from planting new seedlings to removing diseased trees and getting rid of pests. Some national parks have junior ranger programs, so you can take part in many forest-related activities.

Park rangers keep an eye out for forest fires.

Fighting fire

Teams of firefighters dig trenches, clean up debris, and pump water and chemicals to put out wildfires. Firefighters often start controlled fires to keep too many leaves and twigs from building up and fueling a larger fire. Small fires also open up space for seedlings to grow.

Forest helper
You can be a friend to your local forest or woodland by picking up litter, being careful with campfires, and reporting damaged trees.
