

KANG

HE WAS BORN TO CONQUER.

The child destined to be Kang was born in the 30th Century of one of Earth's possible futures. Although his world sparkled with peace and prosperity, he craved action and studied the great warriors of the past. He constructed a great timeship that was modeled to resemble the Sphinx. Traveling to ancient Egypt, he used his scientific knowledge and advanced weaponry to become the absolute monarch of the ancient world.

THE CONQUEROR

Calling himself Rama-Tut, Kang ruled Egypt until the Fantastic Four journeyed back in time and forced him to flee into the timestream. He overshoot the 30th century and arrived in the war-torn 40th century. He soon made himself master of that time period and then decided to extend his empire to include other eras.

A Change of Target

Kang journeyed to the present and landed his warship near Washington D.C. To his surprise, the authorities summoned the newly-formed Avengers instead of the Fantastic Four. Kang soon caught the team in a tractor beam and imprisoned them in his ship. Rick Jones and his Teen Brigade freed the Avengers, who deactivated Kang's battlesuit and forced him to flee back to the future—thereby earning his eternal enmity.

NEW SHIP

Kang replaced his Sphinx-like timeship with a heavily-armed craft.

REVENGE BID

Determined to get his revenge on the Fantastic Four, Kang decided to add their time period to his burgeoning empire.

THE ULTIMATE PRIZE

The membership changed, but Kang didn't care. He longed to crush the Avengers and conquer the one era that eluded his grasp—the present.

HEADING

Kang learned that his ancestor was Nathaniel Richards, the father of Mr. Fantastic, Reed Richards.

A Formidable Foe

Kang is a brilliant scientist and strategist. His body armor is composed of metal alloys that are only available in the 40th century. The battlesuit grants him superhuman strength and is equipped with a 30-day supply of air and food. It contains a force-field projector powerful enough to withstand blows from Thor's hammer. Kang's gauntlets project an anti-gravitational beam and can also fire concussive blasts.

For Love of Ravonna

Kang fell in love with the beautiful Princess Ravonna, ruler of the last unconquered kingdom on an alternate future Earth. Bringing the Avengers to her time, he tried to impress her by defeating them, but she was severely injured by one of his underlings. However, nothing could diminish Kang's unrequited passion.

Immortus

Whenever Kang traveled through time, he created alternate timelines and duplicates of himself. One of these duplicates stumbled into real beyond time. Calling himself Immortus, he renounced his past attempts at conquest and began to untangle the many timelines Kang had accidentally created. Immortus believed he knew what was best for the timestream and thus clashed with both his other selves and the Avengers.

Scarlet Centurion

An alternate version of Rama-Tut became trapped in a time storm and ended up in the 20th century. Adopting the new identity of the Scarlet Centurion, he created a divergent timeline where he contacted the original Avengers shortly after their formation. He convinced them to take over the world for its own good and to imprison all other super beings.

Along Came a Spider...

Kang decided to attack the Avengers with a robot duplicate of Spider-Man. He built the automaton and sent it into the past, where it lured Giant-Man and the Wasp into a trap. When Thor appeared, the robot tricked him into changing back into Dr. Don Blake. Though the robot also managed to defeat Captain America, the real Spider-Man caught on to Kang's plan, fought the robot, and deactivated it. Kang had been foiled once more.

THE GROWING MAN

Originally the size of a child's doll, the Growing Man can reach enormous heights by absorbing any blast, blow, or energy directed at it. Kang has used it against Thor, Iron Man, and the entire Avengers team.