

RACHEL CARSON

American biologist, writer,
and ecologist • 1907–1964

Rachel Carson described her job as “poet of the sea.” She explored the seashore with all of her senses and wrote at length about her own experiences so that everyone could feel the soft mist, smell the salty air, hear the rushing waves, and watch swooping seabirds through her eyes.

Rachel grew up on a farm far from the ocean and always wanted to be a writer. As a teenager, she saw the ocean for the first time and knew she had to be a biologist, too. She dreamed of studying ecosystems—communities of plants and animals living in a specific area—and learning about nature.

Wildlife [...] is dwindling
because its home is being destroyed, but the home of the wildlife is also our home.
