

Chemists ask what things are made of, why substances have certain properties, and why they behave the way they do.
Through chemistry, we can better understand the building blocks of everything—and seek to create brand-new substances and materials that can change the way we live.