

How can we explain the universe?
Physicists' ultimate goal is to find one answer that can explain everything—the movements of stars and galaxies, the behavior of particles smaller than atoms, the different forms of energy, and the mysterious, undetectable dark matter.