

Living things include the most amazing and complex structures in the known universe. Biology is the study of life, from the tiniest microbes to the mightiest plants and animals. Biologists seek to understand living things—how they live and work together and why they succeed and fail.