

Make an extra large family photo album

At around five months your baby is becoming more interested in socializing, and is quite happy to be entertained by other people as long as you stay nearby. To help him become more familiar with faces other than your own, enlarge some photos of family members and friends who he sees more regularly. Cut out images of their faces, as well as your own baby's face, and stick them into a large notebook. Look through the book together and talk about the different faces and who they belong to.
