

Screen scream!

A movie theater in your area may have special movie screenings for parents or caregivers and babies on weekdays. See if your baby will happily sit or sleep on your lap as you watch the movie. He may even be entranced by the images on the large screen, or the music. Or try taking him to a puppet show for toddlers instead: as he sits in the audience, he's having his first experience of live theater.

Exploring taste and texture

Your baby's busy mouthing everything he holds onto. Collect a frozen teething ring, and some safe objects—perhaps a wooden spoon, spatula, a few toys, and small peeled banana—pop them in a mixing bowl, and sit with him while he brings each object to his mouth to explore it. Explain to him what he is holding and how it feels or tastes as you watch him react to the objects with different facial expressions.
