

Give your baby a massage

This is a perfect age for your baby to enjoy a gentle massage on her head, tummy, and limbs, perhaps as part of her bedtime routine after a bath. This calm, soothing way of bonding together will also help her to relax and release tension before she sleeps. Keep the room warm and use a plant-based or edible oil such as olive oil (see p22). As you massage her with gentle, unrushed strokes, keep her attention by singing a lullaby or calmly whispering loving words to her.

Head and tummy

Lie your baby on her back on a soft towel. Start by stroking her head with your hands. Then massage her forehead, working from the center out. Move your fingers over her eyebrows and cheeks and out toward her ears. Then stroke the sides of her face with your thumbs. Move your hands down to her chest and spread them out to the sides of her rib cage. Without lifting your hands, bring them back round in a circular motion to the center of her chest.
