

Skin -to -skin

In the first few days after her birth, keep your baby close by, cuddling up together, bare skin touching, under a blanket to keep you both warm unless the room is well heated. You may prefer to lie her on your chest to be heartbeat to heartbeat.

Research on premature babies shows that skin-to-skin contact not only improves their physical well-being (she should feel safe and calm), it is the most effective way to bond. Make sure both of you as parents spend some time cuddling her skin-on-skin.

