

Back and forth

Now that your baby is sitting upright more often, sit together on the floor facing each other. Roll a soft ball toward him and encourage him to push or bat the ball back to you with his hands.

Include yourself in photos

Don't forget to take photos of yourself with your baby to record many moments spent together in his young life. If you don't have a smartphone or a camera function for taking self-portraits, ask friends, family, or even a passerby, to take a photo of you both.

Mini gym crawl

If your baby is starting to roll, bottom-shuffle, or crawl, get down next to him and move around on the floor together. Your baby will try to copy you, but you can also copy him and turn the activity into a fun mini gym session.

Pass the ball

Take a soft ball or fluffy pom-pom (see p159) and demonstrate how you can pass it between your hands and to your baby. Encourage him to try to pass it back to you.

Sing in a silly voice

Sing familiar action songs such as "Old MacDonald had a farm" in silly accents and different voices—high, squeaky, or very soft right into your baby's ear—to make him giggle and help him to develop a sense of anticipation as he waits to see what you will do next.
