

Make a weekly survival hit list

Your busy family life will be easier to manage if you feel organized about what your baby needs each day. Plot the week ahead on a small blackboard or wipe-clean board and hang it on the kitchen door or fridge where you can see it easily. If you're starting your baby on solid food, for example, you may want to create a chart to keep track of which new foods and in what quantities you can introduce that week. Or perhaps jot down the time and date of his next playdate, or when to give him any medication he should take.

7
MONTH

Secret treat

Show your baby a snack, cover it with a napkin, and let him discover where the snack is. If he enjoys himself while hunting for the secret treat, repeat the game, then give him the snack and encourage him to eat it.

