

Keep emergency snacks with you

Always keep some baby-friendly snacks with you when you are out, in case your baby gets hungry and tired. Put some dried apricots, mini rice cakes, and small breadsticks in airtight Tupperware containers and keep them in the changing bag; they won't go bad or get soggy, even if you leave them in the bag for a couple of days. Keep a clean sippy cup and also a bottle of water (for you to drink from too) in your bag.

Build an obstacle course

If your baby is on the move and learning how to crawl, build a miniature obstacle course on the floor with some cushions or a beanbag and stay at ground level with him. You may want to place a toy just out of his grasp and help him clamber over the cushions to reach it if he needs encouragement to “complete” the obstacle course.
