

Birth recovery for your baby

Recovering from the birth and dealing with a new world is a big adjustment for your baby—and for you as new parents. Make rest and relaxation a priority in these first weeks. Try a peaceful yoga pose or two (good if you have had a cesarian section) to recoup energy levels, disperse any tensions, and feel calm together. Repeat them as often as you like through the day.

Hugging stretch

Lie on your back on a rug or soft surface with a pillow or cushion under your head and neck so you feel supported and comfortable. Lay your baby face down on your chest with his head gently resting to one side. Bend your knees and keep your feet flat on the floor to protect your back. Gently fold your arms over your baby and hold him. Breathe deeply and as you exhale slowly, bring your shoulders down and press the base of your spine against the floor to ease any tension in your back. Repeat four times, then relax.

