

Baby's first tunnel

Stand with both feet apart and give your baby lots of encouragement to shuffle or crawl between your legs. If you have a large cardboard box, open out both ends, get down at floor level with her, and show her how to crawl or roll through it. Alternatively, ask a friend or family member to rest on their hands and knees on the floor to make an arch. Crawl underneath, encourage her to follow you, and enjoy lots of laughter in the process.

seek out the squeak

Your baby's hearing has been highly developed since birth, but now she may be beginning to differentiate between a variety of tones. Hide a squeaky toy or ball—or try a rattle—under a dish towel or small blanket and squeeze or shake it to give a muffled sound. Give your baby time to listen and turn to look across to where she thinks the sound is coming from, then help her find the hidden object and praise her when she uncovers the toy.
