

Scrunchy sock

Stuff an old sock with crumpled-up cellophane and either tie a firm knot in the end or secure it with twine tied in a very firm knot. Show your baby how he can create scrunchy noises by squishing the sock in his hands. To turn the sock into a scrunchy snake toy, use a green sock, firmly sew a short piece of red ribbon (with a "V" shape cut out of one end to make a forked tongue), some felt eyes, and yellow felt triangles as markings along the top of the sock.

Create your baby's first fort

Forts will probably become a big feature of your child's imaginative play in years to come, so why not introduce him to his first fort now. Drape a sheet or tablecloth over a large table to make a hidden space, climb in together, bring a soft toy animal too, and have a pretend tea party.
