

Texture play

Cold cooked noodles or large pasta pieces can make a wonderful texture "toy" for your baby to explore with his hands. He can also practice picking up the noodles or pasta with his fingers and thumbs if his pincer grip is developing. You may want to sit him in his high chair with a large mat underneath, even though this is a playtime, not a mealtime, activity. It doesn't matter if your baby eats some of the noodles or pasta while he plays.

Dinner guest

If your baby is becoming distracted and bored during mealtimes, "invite" a toy that can be wiped down to the dinner table for your baby to feed while you feed him, or for you to feed them both, and talk about his toy.
