

Twenty times try-out

Your baby may take a while to eat a new food, since he needs to see, touch, and taste it first. Experts believe that babies may need to experience a new food up to 20 times before eating it. To make this activity playful and without pressure, make patterns on a plate with the food, or give it a personality—make mashed potato or cauliflower look like a sheep, for example. Keep putting the new food in his bowl and encourage him to touch and squeeze it; eventually it will get to his mouth.

Play in the grass

Babies love new and different sensations. Put your baby in some lush grass and let him feel the grass tickling his bare feet. Pick a blade of grass and gently stroke his arms, legs, and the soles of his feet with it. Pack a picnic lunch and a picnic blanket if you want to make the activity into more of an event.

