

Body and soul

If your baby is in a regular sleeping routine, make the most of his nap time by taking the chance to refresh your brain as well as put your feet up. You'll enjoy the time with your baby when he wakes more if you recharge your batteries by pursuing your own interests. You may want to read the newspaper or even research a new business idea or learn a language.

Make a seesaw for a teddy bear

If your baby is having fun dropping and throwing his toys, try this game. Place a sturdy cardboard tube on the floor and rest a large, thin hardcover book on it to make a seesaw. Put a stuffed animal on one end of the book, press down sharply on the other end with your hand, and watch teddy fly up. Then go get the toy together. Your baby will love to watch his teddy bear travel through the air, and at the same time he'll be learning to track an object by following it with his eyes, and practice picking up his toy.
