

IN and OUT

Build your baby's understanding of position: play games that explore "in" and "out" by mailing a letter together, taking a toy out of the toy basket, and playing with a shape sorter. Repeat the words as you play.

Young musician

Let your baby "play" a piano: help her use her fingers to press down on the piano keys. You can also use a keyboard or toy keyboard.

Descriptive words

When you're out for a walk with your baby, add simple descriptive words—"tall tree," "little dog," and "fast bus"—as you name what you see to support his language development.

Dropping objects

Your baby loves dropping things, but he's also very willing to help with chores that utilize his new skill. Pop him on your knee or sit together and give him some toys to drop into the toy box or rolled up socks to aim into an open drawer.

Make a noise!

Show your baby how to make a noise by holding the handles of two toy plastic mugs, one in each hand, and banging the cups together. This will help to improve his understanding of cause and effect.
