

Express emotions

Your baby is starting to learn about different emotions as she watches you and sees how you react to different situations. She will soon be copying you as she starts to show her emotions through her own behavior and body language, so introduce the concept by demonstrating some of your own emotions—happy, mad, surprised, sad—very simply and obviously as you talk to her.

Suitcase sandbox

Find an old suitcase with rigid sides in the attic, or look for one in a secondhand store.

Make sure that you can close and lock the lid between playtimes. Put a mat on the floor, and the suitcase on top, and pour some sand into the bottom of the case. Sit your baby in the sand and play by hiding her hands and feet in the sand; express surprise when she lifts them out.

Then turn her palms face up and trickle sand through her fingers. You can also help her make patterns in the sand with her fingers.
