

Take a neighborhood walk

Pop your baby into a baby carrier, or sling, facing you (or in his stroller), and take him for a short walk through your neighborhood, talking to him all the while and telling him about any local landmarks. He'll love the sound of your voice and the motion should soothe him.

Eat well

To give you enough energy to care for your baby, eat healthy, nutrient-dense snacks regularly. If you are breast-feeding, your baby will directly benefit from this type of food. Try these instant snacks (which can all be eaten with one hand) to keep your glucose levels, and therefore your mood, stable:

- Hummus with pitas and raw vegetables such as carrot sticks, broccoli florets, and sliced red pepper
- Whole-grain tortilla wrap filled with sliced chicken or turkey and avocado
- Bagel with salmon and cream cheese
- Whole-grain toast with a nut butter spread
- Banana and some raw, unsalted nuts
- Apple and a couple of slices of cheese
