

Moving objects

Your baby finds moving objects irresistible, which is all part of her developing an understanding of cause and effect. If she hasn't started already, she may soon be pushing toys such as cars and trains along the floor with her hands. She will also be fascinated by a bead maze; show her how the beads move along the wire so that she can practice her pincer grip by moving them herself.

Tube talk

Hold a cardboard tube near your baby's ear and gently whisper some words through it. She will turn her head to register where the sounds come from and to listen to what you are saying. Then give her the tube to babble into. She will start to understand the concept of taking turns if you take back the tube to talk to her again. Then for an added sensation, whisper against her skin so she feels your breath as you speak.
