Try these...

Stay hydrated

Drink plenty of liquids to maintain the energy levels you need to take care of your baby. Water is the best way to hydrate, and milk, juice, and decaffeinated and herbal teas are fine in moderation. If you are breast-feeding, avoid caffeine, since it can get into your baby's system, and avoid licorice tea if you have high blood pressure.

Baby in space

Take your baby for a tour around the house. As you walk, support her neck and head and very gently dip and raise her—her brain and body are already receptive to learning how her body moves in different directions.

Mirror your baby's expression

Hold your baby, look into her eyes, and copy her gaze—her wide eyes, perhaps, or her blinking. She may copy you back, since she's already trying to read your face.

Share the hugs

Hugging your baby is one of the most important things you can do as a parent. However, she needs cuddling from everyone in your immediate family so that she gets to know their feel and smell too. Remember, too, that you also need physical affection and care from loved ones.
