

Personalize your baby's space

You probably made your baby's sleeping area as soothing and as neutral as possible when she was a newborn, but now is a good time to adapt it to her personality. You can do something simple such as put a cork bulletin board on a wall to hold a couple of bright images, stand a large cardboard cutout of her favorite character in the corner, paint a simple stencil on the walls, or plan a larger project and redecorate the room. Be aware of the fact that her area must retain a peaceful enough atmosphere to encourage her to sleep.

Set up a book corner

Your baby is learning how to turn the pages of a book, and enjoy looking at the pictures herself, especially if there are also flaps, sounds, and textures to play with. Make a special area in your living space at home with some soft cushions or a rug on the floor for her book corner, and place a few of her favorite books in a decorated cardboard box or a basket for her to explore.
