

Leopard in a tree

Try laying your baby on her front along your forearm with your hand supporting her head (or rest her head on your forearm by your elbow and support her body with both hands). If carrying her like a “leopard in a tree” comes naturally to you and she feels secure, try swaying her gently from side to side.

Bird's-eye view

If you prefer to try holding your baby another way, put her over your shoulder. Keep one hand under her bottom to carry her weight and use your other hand to support her head next to yours. Then walk her around and let her see the world from over your shoulder.