Sound idea

Your baby's hearing is well developed at birth, and by six weeks or so she may be trying to find out where you are if she can hear your voice but can't see you. Try this game to help her coordinate her hearing and eyesight: put her in her baby chair or bouncy seat on the floor and talk to her from different points in the room. See if she turns her head to try to locate where you are.

Trade top tips

Get together with friends, or join a parenting group if your friends haven't yet had babies (see Resources), to share ideas about taking care of a baby; you'll have the satisfaction of helping others, and learn new tips.

Dance to a rhythm

Play some relaxing music that you enjoy moving to. Either sit with your baby supported in your lap and swing together, or stand up with her in your arms and gently move around, supporting her neck if needed.

Baby face

Buy some bright felt, cut out a large circle, and make a simple face by cutting holes for a nose, mouth, and eyes—or use a piece of boldly patterned material instead. Attach the material to the inside of your baby's carriage hood for her to look up at when you are out walking.
