

Try these...

Join a local parent and baby group

When you join a local parent and baby group, your baby will have a greater choice of different toys and new faces to enjoy. Talk to your pediatrician, look online, or check the information board at your library or community center to find a good local group. Try different groups to find one that's right for you both, since they can vary a lot.

First giggles

Your baby is motivated to copy you, so try to make her giggle. Poke out your tongue, smile, raise your eyebrows, and laugh to show her you are having fun. She may respond with her first giggle.

Color vision

Your baby is starting to tell the difference between more subtle shades—orange and red, for example. Keep offering her toys of different colors to catch her attention and entertain her.

Touching sensation

As she gains more control of her arms, hands, and fingers, your baby wants to touch everything, including you. Move closer if she wants to touch your face, and smile at her to encourage her. Be careful though—she hasn't yet learned how to let go!

Changing world

Spend some quiet time with your baby watching the world go by together, and enjoy these peaceful moments. Whether you're outside or indoors looking through a window, sit her on your lap so she can look out. Talk softly to her, describing what you see and pointing to objects and people close by.
