

Book swap

Now that her focus is sharpening, swap your baby's first books for some new board books with pictures that contain slightly more detail and bold, contrasting colors.

Entertain your baby

Dance for, or with, your baby to music you enjoy.

Use exaggerated hand movements, like jazz hands, and big facial expressions to be as comical as possible. She will love watching you having fun and laughing. If there are two of you, one of you may want to carry her in your arms and rock her to the music while the other dances as energetically as they want.

Happy talk

Your baby may be making her first recognizable sounds as she experiments with her own voice. Keep talking to her and if she responds with some “eh” and “oh” vowel sounds, repeat them back to her so she is encouraged to say more.

Noisy toys

Your baby is at the earliest stage of learning about cause and effect. Give her a noisy toy such as a rattle to hold and shake. She'll soon register that her action results in a reaction.
