Visual reassurance

4 MONTH

Hang a large laminated photo of yourself or your partner from the headrest of the back seat so your baby can look at the image while you drive. She will feel reassured by seeing a familiar face, and can be soothed by your voice when you speak to her.

Sit-ups

Put your baby on her back on the floor and sit down opposite her. Hold her hands in yours and count “One, two, three” as you gently pull her to a sitting position. You may need to support her head as you gently lower her back down.

Textured toys

If your baby is beginning to grab hold of objects, give her different textured toys—such as a soft, squishy toy, a cool, smooth plastic toy, and a toy with a bumpy surface—to explore with her fingers and her mouth.

Have a family meal together

Introduce a family meal, perhaps on the weekend, to get into the habit of eating together. Family mealtimes are not only hugely important for communicating and connecting with each other, they help your baby learn about table manners and how to eat; she may also be extremely interested in what you put in your mouth. Let her join in by putting her on your lap or in her baby seat beside you while you eat.
