

Try on-site day care

This month—while she still sleeps a lot and before separation anxiety sets in—is a good time for your baby to try some day care. Look for a gym that has day care on-site to babysit her while you work out, swim, or go to an exercise class.

Let go, grab hold

If your baby is holding a small toy in her hand, pass her another one; she'll automatically drop the one first to take the one offered. This is the start of her learning how to open her hand and let go.

Introduce peekaboo

For a simple game of cause and effect, put a towel or scarf in front of your face and let your baby pull it away with your help. Express surprise and say “Peekaboo!” as the cloth falls away.

Tasty toes

Gently stroke your baby's toes, then lie her on her back and encourage her to try to touch and grab her feet and even bring them to her mouth. Clap and praise her if she can coordinate this difficult move.

Try some new sounds

Your baby may be making cooing sounds now. Make cooing noises or click your tongue several times and encourage her to copy you. She will love the new noises you make.
