

Lullaby playlist

Download some free nursery songs and lullabies from internet websites and put together a musical compilation you can play to your baby when you need to be hands-free to finish a chore or get ready to leave the house. You may want to make up playlists for different moods: pick out a soothing lullaby collection that will help him settle down, so he gradually starts to recognize it as a cue for a quiet time; and a series of upbeat, happy songs that will make him kick his legs with excitement. Play the compilations often so your baby gets to know them well. And, since another voice is singing the songs and lullabies, you will get a bit of a break from singing to him yourself all day!

Look-up tummy time

Put your baby on his front on a soft rug for some tummy time. Lie down on your stomach in front of him so that your heads are almost touching and together you form a long line. Encourage him to lift his head and push up with his arms by holding a toy just in front of him and slightly above his head so he has to look up. This game is a helpful building block for him learning how to start crawling later on.
