

SEA OTTER

In the cold water of the north Pacific, sea otters are kept warm by their extremely thick fur. It holds a layer of air that makes the sea otters very buoyant, so they can rest and even sleep by floating on their backs. The otters wrap kelp fronds around their bodies to stop themselves being swept away by the current.

