

Pounded by waves and swept by the tides, the ocean shores are violent frontier zones, where rock is reduced to rubble and life is a struggle for survival.

