

SCARLET IBIS

Perched on the mangroves growing on the tidal shores of the Caribbean, a flock of scarlet ibis waits for the falling tide to expose the mudflats below. The birds prey on shrimp and similar shellfish, which contain the red substance that turns their feathers scarlet.

