

Covering most of the globe, the oceans contain 97 percent of the world's water. They fill vast rocky basins, which continually change shape beneath them.

