

What is life

To ask “What is life?” is to ask one of the trickiest questions in the Universe. People have been pondering what life is for thousands of years, but have yet to come up with a definite answer.

ARISTOTLE

The Greek philosopher Aristotle was one of the first people to try and pin it down. He thought life was anything that grows, maintains, and reproduces itself.

That’s certainly true of anything we normally think of as alive—animals, plants, and fungi. But there are many other things that fit this description that we would not usually describe as being alive, such as fire or a computer virus.

What’s the difference between you and me?

I’m ALIVE—you’re just an imposter puppy!
