

From ancient pyramids to today's high-tech hotels, powerful people have shown off their status through impressive buildings. As technology improves, the towers get taller.

Big buildings

To be called a building, a tower must be inhabitable (offices or homes). Buildings do not include "supported structures" such as guyed (tethered) masts. Buildings may be measured to their architectural top, as on these pages, or to the tip of any masts or aerials. Here are some of the world's tallest.

